THE IRONPEOPLE

by Debra Thomas

Why do they do it? Why do supposedly sane, mature adults from 31 countries leave their jobs and the comfort of home to subject themselves to a 2.4-mile open-ocean swim followed by a 112-mile bike race and a 26.2-mile marathon—an event described as "lunatic" in a 1979 Sports Illustrated article? The sixth Bud Light Ironman Triathlon World Championship, to be held on the Big Island Oct. 26, will again attract this special breed from around the world to compete with each other and their own wills and bodies for another superhuman triumph. For, to the average person, completion of the Ironman at all is a feat in itself, regardless of the particular race scores.

This event, started only five years ago by Navy Capt. John Collins, has become so popular that of the 12,000 applications mailed out by the Bud Light Ironman Triathlon office for the '85 race, over 3,500 applicants are expected. From these, only 1,250 will be allowed to compete. One hundred fifteen of them will have qualified from last year's event, 435 will enter through nationwide Ironman Qualifying Triathlons, 500 will be admitted from foreign countries and 200 will enter supposedly through luck—by lottery.

The Ironman Triathlon begins and ends in Kailua-Kona, and along the race course are found glimpses of history. The 2.4-mile swim course that opens the race is an elongated rectangle, starting near Kailua Pier and returning next to 'Ahu'ena Heiau, a reconstructed Hawaiian temple adjacent to the site where King Kamehameha I made his last home. The swimming event is held in the same bay where the ancient Hawaiians competed in canoe races.

The 112-mile bike route begins at Kailua Pier and leaves Kailua-Kona over a smooth, paved road to Hawi, returning to finish at the Kona Surf Hotel. The terrain along most of the route is rolling hills. Paralleling this course is the legendary King's Trail where kukini, Hawaiian runners, ran for sport and as messengers of the king. Along the route, at Kawaihae, Pu'ukohola Heiau overlooks the ocean. This ancient temple was rebuilt in 1791 by King Kamehameha I, and it was from here that he launched his successful conquest of the other islands, eventually uniting them all as a kingdom for the first time in their history. Not far from the race's turnaround point stands another sacred site, Mo'okini Luakini, a war heiau. One of the largest and most ancient heiau in the Islands, it was constructed in the year 480, according to traditional chants.
